

Chloe Franklin, Vaccinator
Salisbury City Hall

“At times, the City Hall can feel like a vaccine conveyor belt, especially when we are at our busiest and are vaccinating more than 1,000 people in a single day.

“But although it’s such a fast-paced environment, I feel hugely privileged to be involved in something so extraordinary and of such great importance to the whole country.

“I have two GPs in my family, so I was able to hear first hand about the enormous impact coronavirus was having locally, and the toll it was taking on everybody working in NHS.

“It made me want to help out in any way that I could, and it’s why, despite having not worked for 13 years while raising a family, I became a vaccinator in March 2021.

“It’s a decision I’m so glad to have made as being part of this team gives me such huge satisfaction.

“I actually find myself longing to come in to work each day, which is something not many people can say about their jobs, but it’s so true for me, as well as all of my colleagues.

“The vaccination programme has been so incredibly emotional, and it has been really quite moving to see just how much having the vaccine has meant to some people, especially those who are older or who live on their own, and haven’t seen family or friends for months on end.”
